

THE PRINCE ALBERT TIMES

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8, 1883.

SUNDAY LABOR.

A queer phase of the Sunday labor question has cropped up in Toronto. An elder of Knox Presbyterian Church there, employed in the post office, has conscientious scruples about working on the Sabbath. The gentleman had determined to resign his position rather than desecrate the Sabbath, but his pastor, Rev. Mr. Parsons, advised him to the contrary, and to throw upon the Government the responsibility of discharging him for not working on that day. Mr. Parsons may have helped the elder out of the dilemma so far, but he has pitched the Postmaster-General on one of his horns. It will be amusing to watch how a political contortionist will extricate himself to his own, the elder's and Mr. Parsons's satisfaction.

CENTRALIZATION.

Whether or not the two political parties in Canada have belied their names, no one will deny that they are now divided on old party lines. If the old party line of protection and free trade was not a sufficient means by which to identify them, the present struggle between the Dominion Cabinet and the Local Government of Ontario as to whether power should be centralized in the hands of one governing body or allowed to remain as far as possible in the hands of the people will convince any student of history that neither the Tories nor the Whigs of Canada have forgotten their old party lines. The idea of the one is that the more power, legislative and administrative, there is centred at Ottawa the better; that of the other is that at Confederation it was intended to reserve to the Provinces a certain measure of self government, and that if the British North American Act does not clearly secure them that privilege, it should be revised and amended so as to make it what it was intended to be. The one holds that wherever Dominion jurisdiction comes into conflict with Provincial jurisdiction, the latter should at once give way; the other contends that in that event it should be clearly ascertained what sphere was meant under Confederation to be allowed to the Provinces, and that the Dominion should on no pretence be allowed to invade it. It does not speak very highly of Canadian statesmen that although they may be quite ready to define their views on all constitutional questions that may arise, yet, although sixteen years have passed since our Confederation was formed, a large number of the clauses of the British North American Act still remain unintelligible and uninterpreted.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We are pleased to know that active steps are at last being taken in the important matter of incorporating our town. A petition is being circulated and is meeting with hearty support. Nearly all the property owners in the proposed town site are in favor of the movement, and Mr. Macdowall will find himself backed up in the matter by a sufficient number to enable him to press the measure upon the Council as a matter urgently desired by the people. This is as it should be, and when strangers visit us in the future they will be able to find our town. As the matter is only in process, we are unable to give a draft of the petition, but may be able to do shortly.

Mr. Dalton McCarthy's opinion on the subject of squatters' rights is published in the Regina Leader of the 12th ult. He gives as his opinion that the Government has no right to reserve lands for any purpose or for other than specific purposes authorized by and under the acts. An order reserving a large and indefinite tract of land such as the rail belt of an unconstituted railway is void for uncertainty, and a reservation for town site purposes would seem to be strictly limited to what is ultimately laid out in the survey of the town site. Mr. McCarthy lays down further that a squatter on land which is subsequently reserved as a town site is entitled to his entry.

A special meeting of shareholders of the Prince Albert Curling and Skating Club is called for Friday evening next, over Walters & Baker's store.

NOTICE.

At the meeting held last night for the election of trustees for Miss Baker's school, Messrs. John Stewart, G. Carter and John Macdonald were appointed for the ensuing year. The financial report showed matters to be in a very satisfactory condition. A vote of thanks was given to the retiring trustees for their diligence. Their successors in office were authorized to make the best arrangements possible for better school accommodation.

Sergeant Major Kirk, of D. Troop, N. W. M. P., with five men and horses arrived here from Battleford last week. The object of the visit was to inspect the barracks, the men and the equipments, belonging to the force stationed here. Evidently the Sergeant Major was quite satisfied with the state of affairs at this post, and for which Sergeant Brown deserves to be congratulated.

Sergeant Major Kirk is a veteran in the police service, having been some fourteen years in the Irish Constabulary and over nine years in the N. W. M. P., and is one of the best drill instructors in the force.

THE DUDE.

Oh where is the dude that so lately was with her?

That looked in the sun like a butterfly gay. His glory was as like like stars in the twilight. A moment to charm, then passing silent away.

For the chill rugged blast of our climate did not suit him.

The dude, for he sighed for a tropical air.

He left us but not like a foot-wearer gone. The fact is he borrowed a buckboard and ran.
